

Carrie Steindorff is a Public Health Education Specialist with the Rockland County Department of Health. She has 40 years of public health education experience with an emphasis on community collaborations that address policy, practices, systems, and environmental supports to improve access to healthier choices. In the wake of the COVID-19 pandemic, Carrie is forging relationships between the Department and community partners to improve access to health resources such as vaccination for vulnerable residents. Carrie has her Master of Arts in Health Education from New York University.
