Early Intervention

Not just work— work that matters.

“I chose a career in Early Intervention because it combines my passion for child development with my desire work directly with families. Helping families navigate services, celebrate new skills, and build confidence is incredibly rewarding. Being part of that journey, is what makes this work so special.”

The Early Intervention (EI) Program offers a variety of therapeutic and support services to eligible infants and toddlers (ages 0-3) with disabilities and their families. Local health departments hire EI Service Coordinators to connect families with the right services, and EI Providers to work hands-on with children and families to address developmental needs. Your work can change a child’s life – and support families when it matters most.

Jobs in this field may have minimum education or licensure requirements set by Civil Service. For details on specific qualifications and current openings, visit your county’s personnel or civil service webpage.

If you’re ready for a career that offers meaningful impact, great benefits, and flexibility, your county health department is looking for dedicated professionals like you.
